DIRECTOR'S NOTE

Every Brilliant Thing touches on a lot of delicate issues - among them, suicide, family relationships, and depression. But this show also uplifts the practice of gratitude. We live in a world that has a negativity bias, but it's truly amazing what can happen when you step back and take time to appreciate all the good things in your life. In fact, studies have shown that a regular, sustained gratitude practice has the potential to improve your well-being, reduce anxiety and enhance your outlook on life. And it's free! You can establish your own practice without paying a therapist, a personal trainer or a life coach. Here are a few ideas to get started...

- Daily Journaling - at the end of every day, write down 3 good things that happened and reflect on why those things occurred.
- Write a Thank You Letter every week - tell someone why you are grateful to have them in your life or thank them for something specific. You can choose to send it or not, either way, you will feel the benefit of expressing your gratitude.
- Morning "Brilliant Thing" reflection - spend 1 minute reflecting on something ordinary that is, in fact, brilliant!

For my part, I am thankful for your presence here today and the gift of being able to share this beautiful show with you. I'm also grateful that we live in a society that takes mental health issues seriously. If you know someone who is struggling, reach out to them. If they are in crisis, share the National Suicide and Crisis Lifeline 988 so they can get help. You can be the person whom others are grateful to know!
